Part one – six groups of four players, all players in a group play each other, the top two in each group go through to band one and players coming third and fourth go into band two, the positions players finish in this section will determine their places in part two

Part two - band one and two have four groups of three players, all players in a group play each other, the first, second and third placed players go into separate sections for part three.

Part three – band one has three sections of four players playing in a mini semi-final grid for final play off matches for positions 1-4, 5-8 and 9-12, band two follows exactly the same pattern for positions 13-16, 17-20 and 21-24

In the semi-final grids players play two further matches where a draw is involved and players are prevented from playing someone they played in stage one until their final match so everyone finishes somewhere between 1-24

Note that the structure above is possible for a full 24 player entry. If numbers do not reach these the Organisers will adjust the schedule to a different playing system

NOTE: Recent developments have meant that we may be able to cater for up to 32 players and if this is the case we would have eight groups of four players with the top two into band one and third and fourth into band two, followed by a grid of 16 for each band in stage two with winners and losers in each match playing off until players have played four more games so everyone finishes somewhere between 1-32 When the band one final is played all other matches will cease and just before the final players other than the finalists will help to put a number of tables away to make the final clear up easier, players are also expected to help set up the tables for a prompt start on arrival.
